Király Thermal Bath is the oldest historical Turkish thermal baths of Budapest. This is a coeducational bath, which is opened every day from 7am till 7pm.

The construction of this Bath was begun by Arslan, the Pasha of Buda in 1565 and was completed by his successor, Sokoli Mustafa. The Király Thermal Bath had no direct hot water base, nor has it any today. The Turks built the Bath far from the springs to ensure the opportunity for bathing even in the case of an eventual siege, within the walls of the castle. Its water was supplied at that time, and is being supplied now, from the surroundings of the current Lukács Bath.

The remedial effect of the thermal water erupting from the depth of the earth has been known for thousands of years, however, today we are already able to contribute a lot with the aid of this natural treasure to preserving our health as well: since it refreshes and fondles our body, our soul and our spirit.
